

Reflection 2.01

- For this assignment, I chose oil painting because it truly captures the dramatic atmosphere of a shipwreck during a storm. When everything comes together - the blended colors, layered brushstrokes along with the rich texture it makes the image look more realistic. Furthermore I also think using oil painting made the waves, dark clouds and lightning look and feel more emotional and intense.
- During the second medium where I used woodblock print it created a completely different visual style. The smoothness of colors along with the visuals became more bold, black and white contrasts. It also brought in the craved lines and simplified shapes making the image look more graphic than realistic.
- In both medium A and B what remained unchanged was the main subject. Both images still showed a shipwreck ~~with~~ in a violent storm with large waves and dark sky. The overall composition remain unaltered despite the change in style.
- The final appearance was greatly influenced by the materials used. Oil painting demonstrated soft blending, depth and realistic texture while woodblock printing created a strong contrast and sharp lines. Each method communicated the same scene in different ways.
- A few great insights this activity taught me were that an artwork medium is equally important as its subject is. Altering materials entirely changed the mood and style while retaining the subject, showing how techniques shape the viewer's experience.
